One of the first things that comes to mind is years ago when Drew Brady's business was getting hit because of everything that was going on. And Amanda asked Liana to stop/take down information that was "harming" her husbands business.

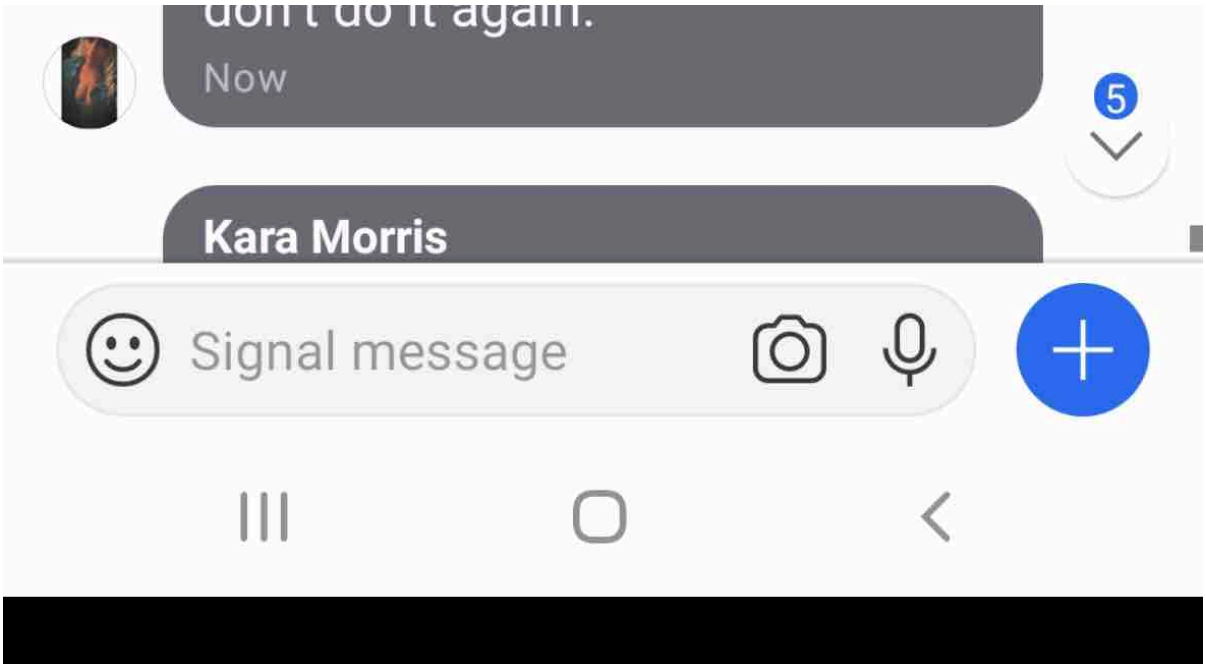

I felt so protective of Liana and did not like that at all. Liana was being attacked on multiple fronts by evil, that these Canadians brought into her life, and Liana had absolutely nothing to do with these people. Liana simply shared what was happening and names that were connected to it all. Instead of being a strong empowered accountable light worker, Amanda cowered and asked Liana to stop.

And Liana did. Because that's the person she is, inside and out since day one. While being viciously attacked, having allegations spread about her that she is a human trafficker and the all time favorite "cult leader" she made a decision to help someone else out regardless of what she was going through. You don't just find a lot of people with that type of compassion, patience, and unconditional love. Especially not when they're going through extremely difficult times, that's when most people move out of the compassion and love they think they're anchored in and into qualities they'd never want to admit they have.

And I feel that's hard for people to understand. For a woman to have the kind of character when there are many trying to break her down.

If only Amanda would've taken the actual guidance that she was seeking for years from Liana like this:

Ok, I thought so. Can you help with some guidance on how to ...
You could ask everyone in the family to write about something they did that they feel might have hurt someone or not been completely honest, why they think they did it and how they could not do it again next time. This way you're not singling her out. And if you and drew also participate it will be awesome. Then, when everyone's done, ask if they'd like to read it out loud. If not, respect that... but read yours out loud and emphasize that people make mistakes and it's ok. The important thing is to be honest about it and learn from it so you

I have this screenshot because it's amazing guidance and I wanted to keep it in case I ever had this situation in my own household. I've been in Liana's community for several years and saw Amanda and Haley reach out continuously for guidance from Liana. I saw their praise for Liana for years, because their lives were getting better and better which they've shared in their own words! But like I said above people's real character really shows when put under pressure. You'll never find Liana flop or flip. Because she is true in who she is. Always. Every day. Forever.

That is why Liana Shanti will always be my teacher.
